A joint initiative of the Institute of English Studies and the Center for Modern Languages at the Leuphana
University of Lüneburg

The LANGUAGE. LEARNING. TECHNOLOGY. conference will explore the role of technology in language learning, teaching, and research. It will highlight not only the opportunities that technology provides for language students to participate in authentic foreign language discourse, but also the educational rationales that necessarily underlie such opportunities when they are integrated into the classroom. Creative and innovative research methods for investigating the evolving language classroom are the final focus of this conference.

The conference is designed to be of interest to both researchers and educators, and to this purpose invites both original research papers and hands-on practice reports.

The call for papers is available on the conference website and invites contributions in these categories:

- Research papers (20 mins. + 10 mins. for questions)
- Practice reports (10 mins. + 5 mins. for questions)
- Poster presentations (exhibition during conference)
